[illegible] EXPOSITION, 1889.

[illegible] SEWING MACHINES

IF A BODY TAKE A BODY

The result is a collision, whether "coming thro' the rye," or not. Life is full of collisions. We are constantly colliding with somebody or something. If it isn't with our neighbors it is with some dread disease that "knocks us off the track" and perhaps dismisses us for life. Women especially it seems, have to bear the brunt of many collisions and afflictions than mankind. In all cases of nervousness, bearing-down sensations, tenderness, periodical pains, sick headache, congestion, inflammation, or ulceration and all female complaints and "weaknesses," Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription comes to the rescue of women as no other medicine does. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money back for it will be refunded. See guarantee on bottle-wrapper.

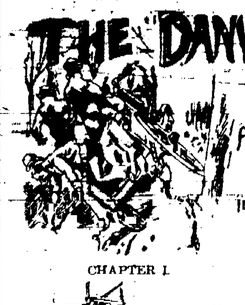
The Perfect Wonder



"You go to England to-morrow"

CHAPTER I.

I was on the point of leaving India and returning to England when he sent for me. At least, to be accurate, and I am always accurate—I was not quite on the point, but nearly, for I was going to start by the mail on the following day. I had been up to Government house to take my leave a few days before, but Sir John had been too ill to see me, or at least he had said he was. And now he was much worse—dying, it seemed, from all accounts, and he had sent down a native servant in the noonday heat with a note, written in his shaking old hand, begging me to come up as soon as it became cooler. He said he had a commission which he was anxious I should do for him in England.

Of course I went. It was not very convenient, because I had to borrow one of our fellow's traps, as I had sold my own, and none of them had the confidence in my driving which I had myself. I was also obliged to leave the packing of my collection of Malay brises and Indian lookeries to my bearer.

I wondered, as I drove along, why Sir John had sent for me. Worse, was he? Dying, and without a friend? Poor old man! He had done pretty well in this world, but I was afraid he would not be up to much once he was out of it; and now, it seemed, he was going. I felt sorry for him. I felt more sorry when I saw him—when the tall, long faced A. D. C. took me into his room and left us.

Yes, Sir John was certainly going. There was no mistake about it. It was written in every line of his drawn, fever worn face, and in his wide, fever lit eyes, and in the clutch of his long, yellow hands upon his tussore silk dressing gown. He looked a very sick, bad old man as he lay there on his low couch, placed so as to court the air from without, cooled by its passage through damped grass screens, and to receive the full strength of the punkah, pulled by an invisible hand outside.

"You go to England to-morrow?" he asked, sharply.

It was written even in the change of his voice, which was harsh, as of old, but with all the strength gone out of it.

"By to-morrow's mail," I said. I should have liked to say something more—something sympathetic about his being ill and not likely to get better, but he had always treated me discourteously when he was well, and I could not open out all at once now that he was ill.

"Look here, Middleton," he went on; "I am dying, and I know it. I don't suppose you imagined I had sent for you to bid you a last farewell before departing to my long home. I am not in such a hurry to depart as all that, I can tell you; but there is something I want done—that I want you to do for me. I meant to have done it myself, but I am down now and I must trust somebody. I know I can trust a clever man. An honest fool—but I am quoting from Pope. I have never trusted anybody all my life, so you may feel honored. I have a small parcel which I want you to take to England for me. Here it is."

DELAMATER'S denial of the charges preferred by Emery comes at such a late day that it should, and probably will not, be given but little weight.

AT the Republican county convention at Harrisburg last week Senator Alex. Thompson said: "The Republican party never did anything for the old soldier, but the old soldier made the Republican party."

MR. WANAMAKER says the new style of postal cards, in several sizes, will be almost equal to penny postage. Mr. Wanamaker is mistaken: there is as much difference as there is between the present Postmaster General and a statesman.

SUPPOSING that some farmer were to ask Quay's man Delamater why the bill to equalize taxation was killed at the last session of the Legislature, what would he say? What would he say if asked why the ballot reform bill was not passed?

THE Louisville Courier-Journal remarks: "Many years ago the Chinese built a great wall in order to keep foreigners out of their home market. These same Chinese are now tearing up a new railroad, believing that it causes floods in their rivers. The American Protectionists and the Chinese are making great progress."

NEARLY three-fourths of the large factories at Fall River, Mass., have been shut down to reduce production. This would seem to indicate that the home market is far from sufficient. Yet the McKinley wing of the Republican party say this market should be still further curtailed. In view of the existing facts, this position is indeed peculiar.

CHARLES S. WOLFE has written a letter under a recent date to Chairman Stevens, of the Prohibition State Committee, in which he says the attitude of the great body of Christians on the prohibition question has completely disgusted him, and he feels it will be his duty to support Pattison for Governor if he should have any reasonable chance of success.

TOM MARSHALL, of Pittsburg, the well-known leader of the Independents in 1882, is authority for the statement that there is to be an organized movement of the independent Republicans in Western Pennsylvania. No independent ticket is to be placed in the field, but all Republicans who own themselves and are dissatisfied with Quayism will be got into line for [illegible]

ANDREW CARNEGIE has founded a library in a Scotch town with $50,000 taken from American tax-payers. He is still demanding higher protection for the infant industries of the country. In his infant iron industry the tariff has in twenty-nine years given him a fortune of $55,000,000. If an infant does so well by Mr Carnegie, what will the industry do when it becomes an adult?

AT a reception tendered him at Chambersburg last Thursday evening Quay's nominee, Delamater, attempted to deny the charges made against him by ex-State Senator Emery. It won't do, Mr. Delamater, to simply deny the allegations of Mr. Emery. They are very damaging, and the Bradford gentleman wants an opportunity to prove them in open court. Give him that chance, Mr. Delamater, and your denial may then carry with it the weight of sincerity.

WHAT has the wonderful blocks-of-five, protection and boodle party accomplished since the election of President Harrison? To be sure Reed, of Maine, has been made Czar and permitted to count an imaginary quorum in the House with his left eye; but the McKinley bill is as good as tal[illegible], the Force bill is dying, Harri[illegible] ceded to Blaine's demands and is going to send a free trade message [illegible] Congress, while the monopoly [illegible] organs of a few weeks ago are [illegible] in favor of [illegible]

THERE has been something of a flutter among Republican congressional aspirants at Williamsport since Congressman H[illegible] announced his renomination. The fact following the announcement that Mr. Mercur's friends would not be a candidate Emerson Collins, a young Williamsport lawyer and Chairman of the Lycoming Republican County Committee, issued a card announcing himself as a candidate. We are ignorant of Mr. Collins' qualifications for this responsible position, but believe it this district has got to be represented by a Republican that no half-[illegible]ration can be [illegible] Hon. Jerome B. Niles, of Wellsboro.

In this [illegible]
Hot an hour out here is better'n a day
Up thar in the city.

As fer that, jes' look at the flowers around,
A-peeping their heads up all over the ground,
An' the fruit a-bending the trees way down
You don't find such things as these in town,
Or, ruther in the city.

As I said afore, such things as these,
The flowers, the birds, and the breath o' the
An' a-living out here among the trees,
Where you can take your ease and do as you

Makes it better'n the city.

Now, all the talk don't 'mount to snuff
'Bout this kinder life a-bein' rough,
An' I'm sure its plenty good enough,
An' 'tween you an' me it ain't half as tough
As it seng in the city.

IN THE WILDERNESS.

The Tragic Death of a Woman on Grant's Picket Line.

Grant and Lee have had their first struggle in the Wilderness, as the former seeks a new road to Richmond. Amidst dense thickets, in lonely fields along narrow highways in the somber forests, a hundred thousand men have fought backwards and forwards, from sun to sun, and now the night has come to shift the scene. There are many lying dead on this tragic ground. There are thousands more lying wounded, parching with thirst, crying out in their agony. Ere shall bleed the road, out no sooner has the sun gone down than Grant begins a movement to the left flank to pass him. If you can not get on a swamp you must pass around it. My division is now left [illegible] the two armies to-night this movement. When it is [illegible] we shall be far to the rear. The ground where we rest is broken. There is forest and [illegible] a narrow highway —a creek—two or three farms, with their buildings [illegible] wounded men. Fifty rods in front of a log house is our picket line. It skirts the cleared land and runs away into the darker woods on a straight line. The neutral ground between us and the enemy is in a strip not over forty rods wide.

At 10 o'clock on this night, when the confusion and turmoil have grown quiet, but while lanterns flash here and there through the woods as men search for the wounded, I am left on "post No. 7" for the coming two hours. My place is under a pine tree which stands in the cleared ground, and all along the front is the dark forest—so dark that a white horse might stand within a hundred feet of me and escape observation. It is a starlight night, but clouds are drifting across the sky and the wind comes in that gusty way which warns you that a storm is brewing at a distance.

For an hour there is no alarm. Grant is moving by the flank. Lee is moving to check-mate him. Grant has left a line to mask his movement. Lee has left a line to mask his. It has been a long terrible day. Darkness brings a respite grateful for all. We have virtually said to each other over the neutral ground:

"Let us alone and we won't disturb you!"

At 11 o'clock a noise in the dark woods in front sends my blood leaping. It was the noise of footsteps breaking dry twigs. There are wounded horses wandering about, but this was not the footstep of a horse. Wounded men may be seeking our lints, but I listen vain to catch a groan or a low call of distress.

"Step! Step! Step!"

The sound is on my left front. Some one is moving to get the shelter of the dark spot directly opposite. He is moving carefully, but I can follow every foot of progress.

"Step! Step! (Halt!) Step! Step!" (Silence!)

Is it a ghoul seeking out the dead and wounded to rob them? Is it a picket from the other line seeking to locate our posts and report how far my rear is? Is it some human devil seeking to dabble his hands in blood after the horrors of the day? Men who had brothers or friends killed in battle by daylight sometimes swore fearful vengeance and went out upon the bloody field at night to secure it.

"Rustle! Step! (Halt!) Step! Step!" (Coming closer.)

If I raise an alarm here it will go up and down the line and arouse a thousand men in a moment. If I let this unknown approach me I may be assassinated. He can not see me in this gloom, but he is slowly approaching in a direct line.

"Halt! Who goes there?"

Deep silence.

If he was a straggler from our lines or a wounded man he would make answ[illegible]

"Step! Step!" And now I hear him sink [illegible] to the earth.

"Who goes there?"

Silence.

IF A BODY ? MT A BODY

the result is a collision, whether "coming thro' the rye," or not. Life is full of collisions. We are constantly colliding with somebody or something. If it isn't with our neighbors it is with some dread diseases that knocks us off the track and perhaps dispatches us for life. Women especially it seems, have to bear the brunt of many collisions and infections than mankind. In all cases of nervousness, bearing-down sensations, tenderness, periodical pains, sick headache, congestion, inflammation, or ulceration and all "female irregularities" and "weaknesses," Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription comes to the rescue of women as no other medicine does. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it will be refunded. See guarantee on bottle-wrapper.

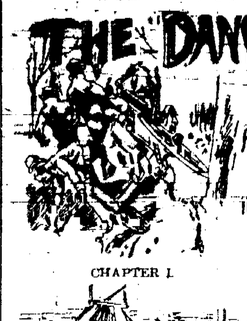
THE DANVERS JEWELS

AN ANONYMOUS NOVEL

In Which is Told a Thrilling Story of Baffled Crime.



CHAPTER I.

"You go to England to-morrow?"

I was on the point of leaving India and returning to England when he sent for me. At least, to be accurate, and I am always accurate—I was not quite on the point, but nearly, for I was going to start by the mail on the following day. I had been up to Government house to take my leave a few days before, but Sir John had been too ill to see me, or at least he had said he was. And now he was much worse—lying, it seemed, from all accounts, and he had sent down a native servant in the noonday heat with a note, written in his shaking old hand, begging me to come up as soon as he became cooler. He said he had a commission which he was anxious I should do for him in England.

Of course I went. It was not very convenient, because I had to borrow one of our fellow's traps, as I had sold my own, and none of them had the confidence in my driving which I had myself. I was also obliged to leave the packing of my collection of Malay krises and Indian knickeries to my bearer.

I wondered, as I drove along, why Sir John had sent for me. Worse, was he? Dying, and without a friend? Poor old man! He had done pretty well in this world, but I was afraid he would not be up to much once he was out of it; and now, it seemed, he was going. I felt sorry for him. I felt more sorry when I saw him—when the tall, long faced A. D. C. took me into his room and left us.

Yes, Sir John was certainly going. There was no mistake about it. It was written in every line of his drawn, fever worn face, and in his wide, fever lit eyes, and in the clutch of his long, yellow hands upon his russore silk dressing gown. He looked a very sick, bad old man as he lay there on his low couch, placed so as to court the air from without, cooled by its passage through damped grass screens, and to receive the full strength of the punkah, pulled by an invisible hand outside.

"You go to England to-morrow?" he asked, sharply.

It was written even in the change of his voice, which was harsh, as of old, but with all the strength gone out of it.

"By to-morrow's mail," I said. I should have liked to say something more—something sympathetic about his being ill and not likely to get better, but he had always treated me discourteously when he was well, and I could not open out all at once now that he was ill.

"Took her, Middleton," he went on; "I am dying, and I know it. I don't suppose you imagined I had sent for you to bid you a last farewell before departing to my long home. I am not in such a hurry to depart as all that, I can tell you; but there is something I want done—that I want you to do for me. I meant to have done it myself, but I am down now and I must trust somebody. I know I can trust a clever man. An honest fool—but I am suggesting from experience, I am not going to trust you with all my secrets. I have had trusted servants nearly all my life, so you may well be sure I have a small parcel which I want to take to England for me. Now it is——"

He stopped and then he said:

DELAMATER'S denial of the charges preferred by Emery comes at such a late day that it should, and probably will not, be given but little weight.

AT the Republican county convention at Harrisburg last week Senator Alex. Thompson said: "The Republican party never did anything for the old soldier, but the old soldier made the Republican party."

MR. WANAMAKER says the new style of postal cards, in several sizes, will be almost equal to penny postage. Mr. Wanamaker is mistaken: there is as much difference as there is between the present Postmaster General and a statesman.

SUPPOSING that some farmer were to ask Quay's man Delamater why the bill to equalize taxation was killed at the last session of the Legislature, what would he say? What would he say if asked why the ballot reform bill was not passed?

THE Louisville Courier-Journal remarks: "Many years ago the Chinese built a great wall in order to keep foreigners out of their home market. These same Chinese are now tearing up a new railroad, believing that it causes floods in their rivers. The American Protectionists and the Chinese are making great progress."

NEARLY three-fourths of the large factories at Fall River, Mass., have been shut down to reduce production. This would seem to indicate that the home market is far from sufficient. Yet the McKinley wing of the Republican party say this market should be still further curtailed. In view of the existing facts, this position is indeed peculiar.

CHARLES S. WOLFE has written a letter under a recent date to Chairman Stevens, of the Prohibition State Committee, in which he says the attitude of the great body of Christians on the prohibition question has completely disgusted him, and he feels it will be his duty to support Pattison for Governor if he should have any reasonable chance of success.

TOM MARSHALL, of Pittsburg, the well-known leader of the Independents in 1882, is authority for the statement that there is to be an organized movement of the independent Republicans in Western Pennsylvania. No independent ticket is to be placed in the field, but all Republicans who own themselves and are dissatisfied with Quayism will in good time [illegible]

ANDREW CARNEGIE has founded a library in a Scotch town with $50,000 taken from American tax-payers. He is still demanding higher protection for the infant industries of the country. In his infant iron industry the tariff has in twenty-nine years given him a fortune of $55,000,000. If an infant does so well by Mr Carnegie, what will the industry do when it becomes an adult?

AT a reception tendered him at Chambersburg last Thursday evening Quay's nominee, Delamater, attempted to deny the charges made against him by ex-State Senator Emery. It won't do, Mr. Delamater, to simply deny the allegations of Mr. Emery. They are very damaging, and the Bradford gentleman wants an opportunity to prove them in open court. Give him that chance, Mr. Delamater, and your denial may then carry with it the weight of sincerity.

WHAT has the wonderful blocks-of-five, protection and boodle party accomplished since the election of President Harrison? To be sure Reed, of Maine, has been made Czar and permitted to count an imaginary quorum in the House with his left eye; but the McKinley bill is as good as tal[illegible], the Force bill is dying, Harri[illegible] acceded to Blaine's demand and is [illegible] free trade message [illegible] Congress, while the monopoly [illegible] Americans of a few weeks ago are [illegible] themselves inured in favor of [illegible]

THERE has been something of a flutter among Republican congressional aspirants at Williamsport, since Congressman [illegible] announced his renomination. The dark horse movement that Mr. McCormick would be a candidate [illegible] a young Williamsport lawyer and Chairman of the Lycoming Republican County Committee, issued a card announcing himself as a candidate. We are ignorant of Mr. Collins' qualifications for this responsible position, but believe it this district has got to be represented by a man [illegible] than Mr. [illegible] of Williamsport.

THE policy of "protection to the workingman," approved by Delamater, has lost its effect [illegible] in a Republican [illegible] Wilkesbarre. Up thar in the city.

Jes' ginger! how I do, like you'll say,
In this hyer [illegible]-y, careless way.
But an hour out here is better'n a day
Up thar in the city.

As fer that, jes' look at the flowers around,
A-peeping their heads up all over the ground,
An' the fruit a-bending the trees way down,
You don't find such things as these in town,
Or, ruther in the city.

As I said afore, such things as ther',
The flowers, the birds, and the bees, an' fly
An' a-living out here among the trees,
Where you can take your ease and do as you
Makes it better'n the city.

Now, all the talk don't 'mount to snuff
'Bout this kinder life a-bein' rough,
An' I'm sure its plenty good enough,
An' 'tween you an' me it ain't half as tough
As living in the city.

James Whitcomb Riley.

IN THE WILDERNESS.

The Tragic Death of a Woman on Grant's Picket Line.

Grant and Lee have had their first struggle in the Wilderness, as the former seeks a new road to Richmond. Amidst dense thickets, in lonely fields along narrow highways in the somber forests, a hundred thousand men have fought backwards and forwards, from sun to sun and now to night has come to shift the scene. There are many men lying dead on this fearful ground. There are thousands more lying wounded, very many with thirst, and out in their agony. Lee that knock the road cut no sooner has the sun gone down than Grant begins a movement by the left flank to pass him. If you can not cross a swamp you must pass around it. My division is on left; between the two armies to-day this movement. When it is completed we shall be far to the rear. The ground where we rest is broken. There is forest and to get a march Highway—a creek—two or three small farms, with their buildings fired with wounded men. Fifty rods in front of a log house is our picket line. It skirts the cleared land and runs away into the darker woods on a straight line. The neutral ground between us and the enemy is in a strip not over forty rods wide.

At 10 o'clock on this night, when the confusion and turmoil have grown quiet, but while lanterns flash here and there through the woods, as men search for the wounded, I am left on "post No. 7" for the coming two hours. My place is under a pine tree which stands in the cleared ground, and all along the front is the dark forest—so dark that a white horse might stand within a hundred feet of me and escape observation. It is a starlight night, but clouds are drifting across the sky and the wind comes in that gusty way which warns you that a storm is brewing at a distance.

For an hour there is no alarm. Grant is moving by the flank. Lee is moving to check-mate him. Grant has left a line to mask his movement. Lee has left a line to mask his. It has been a long terrible day. Darkness brings a respite grateful for all. We have virtually said to each other over the neutral ground

"Let us alone and we won't disturb you!"

At 11 o'clock a noise in the dark woods in front sends my blood leaping. It was the noise of footsteps breaking dry twigs. There are wild horses wandering about, but this was not the footstep of a horse. Wounded men may be seeking our lints, but I listen vain to catch a groan or a low call of distress.

"Step! Step! Step!"

The sound is on my left front. Some one is moving to get the shelter of the dark spot directly opposite. He is moving carefully, but I can follow every foot of progress.

"Step! Step! (Halt!) Step! Step!" (Silence!)

Is it a ghoul seeking out the dead and wounded to rob them? Is it a picket from the other line seeking to locate our posts and report how far we are out? Is it some human fiend seeking to dabble his hands in blood after the horrors of the day? Men who had brothers or friends killed in battle by daylight sometimes swore fearful vengeance and went out upon the bloody field at night to secure it.

"Rustle! Step! (Halt!) Step! Step!" (Coming closer.)

If I raise an alarm here it will go up and down the line and arouse a thousand men in a moment. If I let this unknown approach me I may be assassinated. He can not see me in this gloom, but he is slowly approaching in a direct line.

"Halt! Who goes there?"

Deep silence.

If he was a straggler from our lines or a wounded man he would make answer.

"Step! Step!" And now I hear him sink to the earth.

"Who goes there?"

Silence.

I am waiting with more [illegible]
